Writing

Mr. Potter and awful basement.

I close my eyes imagining a better life, a normal room, a cozy bed. If only my parents were alive... When I open my eyes the reality sets in. I feel hopeless.

The ~~dark~~ old rusty basement that I'm obligated to spend my days in is so dark, I almost feel blind. I light up the single candle on the tremendous cardboard that's meant to be my table. Another letter. I write another letter because I can't lose hope. I can't stop thinking about earlier... A talking snake? As ridiculous as it sounds I don't feel crazy. I feel special.

As I write down my last words I can tell it's raining outside. I wish I could feel the wind that would hit my face. It probably smells fresh there unlike here.

I wonder if Hogwarts is the same as I imagined it.

My thoughts are stopped by a loud knock on the door. I peak outside of my door and notice shimmering lights reflected from the walls. Thunder. So loud that I step away from my door by instinct. I hear a bang followed by my aunt's scream. I finally step outside and see an enormous man standing in the doorway. A second passes before he comes to me. I stand my ground. "You are a wizard Harry" says the man showing me his friendly smile holding my last letter in one hand and a birthday cake in another. His look is friendly, I trust this man, maybe he is my way to freedom. Maybe I am finally happy. I am going to the infamous Hogwarts ~~the~~. My life ~~is~~ finally begins.
